

MRS. 'BOB' TELLS ABOUT THE FIGHT

Wife of the Prize Fighter Says that She Never Again Wants to See a Battle in the Roped Arena.

BUT SHE WILL BE THERE IF "BOB" FIGHTS AGAIN.

Ex-Champion's Wife Watched the Contest in Philadelphia on Saturday Night and Applauded Her Husband.

"I don't care to see another prize fight, but if my husband should again enter the ring I want to be there," said Mrs. Robert Fitzsimmons, the charming young wife of the famous pugilist, to-day, to an Evening World reporter, at the Fitzsimmons home, at Bensonhurst.

The fact that the great Fitzsimmons-O'Brien contest, held at the Philadelphia Ball Park Saturday afternoon, was not only the first prize-fight ever witnessed by "Mrs. Bob," but also the first time that the young woman had ever seen her renowned husband in his professional character as a pugilist, made the occasion one of particular interest to her and her opinions on the subject worthy of consideration.

One of the most noticeable figures at the fight, it may be said, was this same young woman. Dressed tastefully in a strictly up-to-date costume of white linen, she sat close to the ring, her eyes never for an instant wavering from the powerful, gaunt form of "Lanky Bob," the old "King of the Ring."

She Shared Attention.

Mrs. "Fitz," who is known in the theatrical world as Miss Julia Gifford, is an exceedingly pretty young woman with wavy golden hair parted in the middle, regular features and a dimpled smile which would distract attention even from a prize-fight.

In fact, it did—that is, before the fun waxed fast and furious and the knowledge spreading that the attractive, refined-looking girl so interestedly and nervously watching the proceedings was the wife of old Fitz stimulated public curiosity to a degree only lessened by the interest of the bout.

When Fitzsimmons came across the field from his dressing-room, and, stopping in front of his wife, kissed her warmly, like a veritable knight of old, she was so much interested in the fight, the crowd applauded vigorously.

And when, at last, he was declared off and Fitz stood bleeding from various cuts and bruises inflicted upon his grim countenance, yet with victory pointing his way—then when Mrs. Bob went up to him and impulsively slapped his swollen lips, the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds.

Has the Lion Cub.

To-day Mrs. Fitzsimmons is a very young person. Seated in her delightful little boudoir, with a view from its windows overlooking the water, this charming woman and prize-fighter seemed as incongruously associated as did the tawny lion cub resting its great head on her lap and the intricate of the exquisite, beaded, rose-colored accordion.

When the lion cub, which she wore, was seen, it was a very young person. "I don't think I ever saw and I can't say that I am anxious to see another. Not that I think it half so brutal as some people imagine," disclaimed the lady, "but I should, of course, rather not have Mr. Fitzsimmons enter the ring at all any more. However, if he does, as I said before, I shall most certainly attend the fight and want him to win."

Not a Roach Game.

"Because you were afraid that Mr. Fitzsimmons would get hurt?" asked the visitor. "No, I didn't think much about that. Men are seldom hurt badly in fights, not nearly so often or so seriously as they are in football and baseball games. And I am not foolishly sensitive at the sight of blood, either. I have frequently watched my husband box, though I had never seen him do so exceedingly thin, and the least little scratch draws blood, so when I saw him Saturday with a rather battered-looking face I knew it did not mean much."

"Then were you afraid he would be beaten?" "Oh, no, indeed," was the quick reply. "I have full confidence in his ability. It was simply, I suppose, because I had never seen him box in public before, and then it seemed to me that for the first two or three rounds he was terribly careless and was not doing so well as he could. There was no need for him to give his opponent such chances. "Be more cautious, Bob," I found myself saying at the end of the second round.

"I couldn't understand it, and it made me frightfully nervous, although I did not doubt that Bob would come out of it all right. Still he was not at his best. I knew enough of boxing to see that."

"The little woman's dead right," came a voice from the door. And there stood Fitz himself, dressed in his favorite old gray jersey and slouch hat, looking at his wife with a bit of the worst of wear, one eye being rather bloodshot, also a little puffy and black underneath, while his upper lip was swollen a trifle on one side. Still he was doing nicely, thank you, and his blue eyes twinkled as merrily as ever.

"I wasn't in good condition," said Fitz, "and I was a bit stiff at first. You see, I sort of got hysterical in the thing when the first date was spoiled by the Mayor. I broke my training, and for a week before this fight had been drinking wine. Then just before the fight I took a cold bath, rubbed myself with menthol and sat in a draught. I was in a chill when we began and as stiff as an old cart horse. It took me two or three rounds to get warmed up."

"O'Brien? He's a very clever young fellow."

"I don't think, Bob, that you gave him credit for being so good, but in Mrs. Bob, "You did not play skillfully enough at first."

"That swollen lip of his," she continued, "comes from a cut on the under side, where the blow forced the lip against a diamond which fills one of his teeth."

To the look of surprise on the visitor's countenance, Mrs. Fitzsimmons replied: "Yes, he has two diamond fillings in his teeth. His front teeth are all right, but just where the gold bridge work begins the dentist insisted upon inserting a diamond, one on each side of the upper jaw where the molars begin."

"At the earnest request of the audience, Fitz exhibited his diamond on the good side, the other being closed for repairs. "A prize-fight is certainly interesting," said Mrs. Fitzsimmons, "and I think there is a good deal of unnecessary prejudice against it. "Why," interrupted her husband, "when I was in Juarez, Mexico, I went to a bull fight and saw a horse gored by a bull until he was a sight which would turn your soul sick, yet the poor blundered beast was prodded on until the bull gored him to the heart."

"And you do not call this brutal, said I to the Governor, 'yet you object to a prize-fight on Mexican territory?' "This is our national sport," said he, and this was the only answer he could make.

"Brutal Football Game. "Again, I saw a football one man deliberately twist back the arm of another, endeavoring to break it. When they got the man down they kicked him on the head with their heavy shoes. Anything to maim and carry him off the field. These tactics are not used in prize-fighting."

"Say," said Fitz, interrupting his discourse, "do you notice how I say 'are not now?' The little woman coaches me and I ain't said 'ain't' for a dozen years."

"I want to say, though, is, let the people who howl against the brutality of prize-fighting first get busy and make it as hot for the football and baseball fighters as for the boxer."

"Personally," said Mrs. Bob, "although I don't think the sight of a bit of blood should turn people squeamish, yet I should rather have Mr. Fitz devote his attention to his theatrical career."

"But your life!" said the Cornishman. "I'm going to settle down now to 'A Fight for Love,' which we open with next month. And, say, this girl's got the goldenest voice you ever heard. I ain't seen no gold to say much about it, but—just wait!"

The police of the Church street station believe they have found a young Munchausen in the person of a boy of eleven years who was picked up to-day by Patrolman Thomas Perry. He was dressed in knickerbockers and a shirt waist and said his name was James Keenan and that he lived with his grandmother, Mrs. Martin, at No. 61 Navy street, Brooklyn. He said his mother was alive but he did not know where she was.

The police investigated and went to 61 Navy street, where they found a large factory at the number where the boy had said he lived. When they returned to the station and acquainted James with this fact he seemed much surprised. He was turned over to the Children's Society.
